Notes to Contributors

The essence of publishing conference proceedings such as these is SPEED. Please do all you can to meet the deadlines set by your editor. It will also help if the following basic rules of style are followed.

REFERENCES

In the text. If there are one or two authors please quote one or both names and year of publication. When there are three or more authors quote the name of the first and add et al and the date of publication.

Examples:
(Waddell & Butler, 1957)
(Asatoor et al, 1965)

In the bibliography. Please quote all the authors (each followed by his initials) then the year of publication, followed by the name of the journal, its volume number and the page number of the first page of the article.

Examples:
Waddell, W. J. and Butler, T. C. (1957) Journal of Clinical Investigation, 36, 1217

All references in the bibliography to be in alphabetical order.

All references have arabic numerals, with the exception of the volume number of the Lancet, which has roman numerals.

Italics. There are no Italics on the electric typewriter. Where these are considered essential the word is underlined, as Staphylococcus aureus.

In vitro, in vivo, et al etc. are not underlined.

Abbreviations. No full stops used between capital letters, e.g. WHO, USA.

No full stops after gram(s), kilogram(s) etc., e.g. g kg mg/kg/day.

Can't, won't didn't etc. are always written out in full: cannot, will not, did not.

Illustrations. The quality of illustrations printed depends entirely on what contributors submit. Please make sure that all labelling is neat and legible (remembering that illustrations may well be reduced in size) and that any photographs should be actual prints, not copies taken from journals.

These must not be mounted in the text, but submitted each on a separate sheet and given a figure number which accords with the order in which it appears in the text. Captions to figures should be as brief as possible and listed separately, each being preceded by its figure number. Each illustration must be labelled with the name of the contributor, its figure number and, if necessary, an indication of top and bottom.

Acknowledgments. Authors are responsible for ensuring that any acknowledgements necessary are included in their manuscripts.
